

TECHNOLOGY ADMINISTRATORS have a broad knowledge of business functions as well as extensive computer skills. They apply project management skills to all areas of their responsibilities. Depending on their roles and titles, company size and complexity, they may plan and design networks, develop budgets and policies, purchase equipment and coordinate installation, analyze and evaluate trends and new technologies, monitor and evaluate network performance and use software to create solutions.